The London-based company cleaning up the coffee industry

WITH ALMOST 75% OF US now claiming to be passionate about sustainable living*, a drive already well underway in the takeaway coffee market, with more and more of us ditching the disposables for the reusables. But what's happening on the supermarket shelves? Well, one retail coffee company has been causing quite the stir.

Percol Coffee has achieved a world's first with the launch of plastic-free packaging across its range of ground and beans – a pioneering move to combat the 100 million non-recyclable plastic packs used in the industry each year.

Made from renewable resources such as plant fibres and eucalyptus wood pulp, the Percol packs are also fully home-compostable, meaning you can chuck them straight in with your food scraps.

If you're a coffee lover all about the beans, fear not – Percol's new range doesn't skimp on flavour. In fact, it's 100% organic, Fairtrade certified, and made from single-origin Arabica beans.

Percol spent decades investing in the farmers who grow their delicious coffee, generation after generation. Percol Coffee's next mission? To be the most sustainable coffee company. Plastic-free. Carbon-neutral. Fairtrade-certified. Here's to positive drinking.

Eat different, make a difference

HERE'S THE SCENARIO: while over one-third of the food produced goes to waste, accounting for 8% of all annual greenhouse gas emissions, over eight million people in the UK live in food poverty. Feeling overwhelmed? Don't! Doing good and eating well can be easy.

Here's how ODDBOX is London's first sustainable fruit and veg subscription box that tackles most of our food shop and environmental worries in one go. With a low-waste philosophy, they work closely with British farmers, rescuing surplus fruit and veg at risk from going to landfill. Reasons why rescued produce doesn't make it to supermarket shelves vary. Strict cosmetic and quantity requirements often mean farmers find themselves with too much or 'less perfect' versions of a certain crop. And that's where ODDBOX comes in, delivering delicious, colourful fruit and veg to more than 10,000 mindful homes in London.

Reduce plastic, introduce variety, eat seasonally and affordably and have your weekly shop, farm fresh, directly delivered to your door. With every medium ODDBOX you save an average of 7kg of veg from going to waste, 14kg of CO₂ emissions (the equivalent of 35 miles driven in a car) and 1,722 litres of water. On top of this, ODDBOX partners with local charities that fight food poverty, donating up to 10% of their produce.

And when you thought it couldn't get any better – order your box now and get 50% off your first delivery using CHECKLIST50 at oddbox.co.uk/delivery and start saving the planet one box at a time.
